QUESTION PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Whether the Eleventh Circuit erred in dismissing Petitioner's appeal for failure to timely file a notice of appeal, when such notice was filed within the requisite time after entry of a separate judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 58 pursuant to this Court's holding in Bankers Trust Co. v. Mallis, 435 U.S. 381 (1978) that "a party need not file a notice of appeal until a separate judgment has been filed and entered."

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT

Petitioner John A. King, D.O. respectfully petitions for a Writ of Certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The decision of the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals is not reported. App. at 22.[1] The order denying rehearing is not reported. App. at 24.

JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction to consider this case by way of a Writ of Certiorari pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 58(a) states as follows:

(a) Separate Document.

(1) Every judgment and amended judgment must be set forth on a separate document, but a separate document is not required for an order disposing of a motion:

(A) for judgment under Rule 50(b);

(B) to amend or make additional findings of fact under Rule 52(b);

(C) for attorney fees under Rule 54;

(D) for a new trial, or to alter or amend the judgment, under Rule 59; or

(E) for relief under Rule 60.

(2) Subject to Rule 54(b):

(A) unless the court orders otherwise, the clerk must, without awaiting the court's direction, promptly prepare, sign, and enter the judgment when:

(i) the jury returns a general verdict,

(ii) the court awards only costs or a sum certain, or

(iii) the court denies all relief;

(B) the court must promptly approve the form of the judgment, which the clerk must promptly enter, when:

(i) the jury returns a special verdict or a general verdict accompanied by interrogatories, or

(ii) the court grants other relief not described in Rule 58(a)(2).

Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 4(a)(1)(A) states that "In a civil case, except as provided in Rules 4(a)(1)(B), 4(a)(4), and 4(c), the notice of appeal required by Rule 3 must be filed with the district clerk within 30 days after the judgment or order appealed from is entered." Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 4(a)(1)(A) states that "When the United States or its officer or agency is a party, the notice of appeal may be filed by any party within 60 days after the judgment or order appealed from is entered."

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Petitioner John A. King, D.O. ("Relator" or "Petitioner"), filed this qui tam action under the False Claims Act on March 17, 1999. The district court had jurisdiction of the action pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730. Following the dismissal of his original complaint, Relator filed a First Amended Complaint ("FAC") on September 2, 2003, asserting claims against Defendant Jackson County Hospital Corporation ("JCH"). On June 1, 2004, the district court entered an order granting JCH's motion to dismiss the FAC. [App. at 1]. The court held that most of Relator's allegations failed to satisfy the particularity requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b), and that those allegations that did satisfy Rule 9(b) failed to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). The Court allowed Relator 20 days to file an amended complaint. [App. at 19]. Relator elected not to file an amended complaint, and the district court entered an order dismissing Relator's complaint with prejudice on August 26, 2004. [App. at 20]. Judgment was entered in favor of JCH on August 31, 2004, and Relator filed his notice of appeal on September 29, 2004. [App. at 21].

On October 27, 2004, JCH filed a motion to dismiss Relator's appeal in the Eleventh Circuit, asserting that, under Schuurman v. Motor Vessel "Betty K V", 798 F.2d

442 (11th Cir. 1986), the notice of appeal was untimely because it was not filed within 30 days after the expiration of the time period to file an amended complaint under the district court's June 1, 2004 order. Relator responded by noting that, under Bankers Trust Co. v. Mallis, 435 U.S. 381 (1978) and United States v. Indrelunas, 411 U.S. 216 (1973), an appellant need not file a notice of appeal until after the entry of a separate judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 58. See Mallis, supra at 385 ("a party need not file a notice of appeal until a separate judgment has been filed and entered"). Because Relator's notice of appeal was filed within the required time after the district court's August 31, 2004 judgment, the appeal was timely filed.[2]

On January 10, 2005, a panel of the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals dismissed the appeal, holding that Relator's notice of appeal was not timely filed. [App. at 22]. In its one-paragraph order, the panel did not discuss or even refer to the contrary Supreme Court authority cited by Relator, and did not give any reason for its refusal to follow such authority.

On January 31, 2005, Relator timely filed a petition for rehearing en banc, again pointing out the conflict between the panel's decision and the Supreme Court's rulings in Mallis and Indrelunas, which clearly provide that an appellant need not file a notice of appeal until after the entry of a separate judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 58. Relator noted that the panel had failed to make any attempt to distinguish or reconcile its decision with such contrary Supreme Court authority, and also noted that the two Eleventh Circuit cases relied upon by the panel were dicta that did not require dismissal.

[2] Although it does not affect the outcome of this case, Relator noted below that, because the United States is the real party-in-interest in a False Claims Act case like this one, the applicable time period for filing a notice of appeal is in fact 60 days, as set forth in Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1)(B), rather than 30 days. See United States ex rel. Lu v. Ou, 368 F.3d 773, 775 (7th Cir. 2004); United States ex rel. Russell v. Epic Healthcare Management Group, 193 F.3d 304 (5th Cir. 1999); United States ex rel. Haycock v. Hughes Aircraft Co., 98 F.3d 1100 (9th Cir. 1996). Relator also notes that, in its initial order, the Eleventh Circuit mistakenly referred to the "October 4, 2004" notice of appeal [App. at 22]. As the docket sheet indicates, the notice of appeal was filed on September 29, 2004, and October 4 was simply the date that the clerk made the entry on the docket.

On March 10, 2005, the same three-judge panel entered an order denying Relator's petition for rehearing. [App. at 24]. In its one-sentence order, the panel again did not discuss or refer to the contrary Supreme Court authority cited by Relator, and did not give any basis for refusing to follow such authority.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

The Court should grant the petition because the Eleventh Circuit's decision is directly contrary to unambiguous rulings by this Court in Bankers Trust Co. v. Mallis, 435 U.S. 381 (1978) ("a party need not file a notice of appeal until a separate judgment has been filed and entered") and United States v. Indrelunas, 411 U.S. 216, 220 (1973) (holding that Rule 58 must be "mechanically applied"). Indeed, although such authority was brought to the panel's attention by Relator, the panel did not even address such authority in its decision, much less offer any reasons for refusing to apply such authority. Rather, the panel simply ignored the conflicting Supreme Court authority in order to reach a result forbidden by such authority. In so doing, the panel has adopted for the Eleventh Circuit a rule that stands in direct contradiction to binding authority of this Court. Accordingly, this Court should grant certiorari in order to ensure compliance with its unambiguous rulings. Indeed, Relator believes that this is an appropriate case for summary resolution under Supreme Court Rule 16(1) ("The order [on the petition for a writ of certiorari] may be a summary disposition on the merits").

1. Dismissal is precluded by binding Supreme Court authority regarding the "separate document" rule.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 58(a) states that "[e]very judgment and amended judgment must be set forth on a separate document," subject to certain exceptions that are not applicable in this case. The Supreme Court has repeatedly made it clear that the "separate document" rule is a bright-line rule (although it may be waived by the parties), and that a party need not file a notice of appeal until the entry of a separate judgment in accordance with Rule 58(a). In United States v. Indrelunas, 411 U.S. 216, 220 (1973), the Court noted that:

> The reason for the "separate document" provision is clear from the notes of the advisory committee of the 1963 amendment. See Notes of Advisory Committee following Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 58, reported in 28 U. S. C. Prior to 1963, there was considerable uncertainty over what actions of the District Court would constitute an entry of judgment, and occasional grief to litigants as a result of this uncertainty. See, e.g., United States v. F. & M. Schaefer Brewing Co., 356 U.S. 227 (1958). To eliminate these uncertainties, which spawned protracted litigation over a technical procedural matter, Rule 58 was amended to require that a > judgment was to be effective only when set forth on a separate document.

The Court expressly rejected the idea of taking a "case-by-case" approach to the separate document rule, holding that "[t]hat provision is . . . a 'mechanical change' that must be mechanically applied in order to avoid new uncertainties as to the date on which a judgment is entered." Id. at 221-222.

Subsequently, in Bankers Trust Co. v. Mallis, 435 U.S. 381, 385 (1978), the Court expressly held that "a party need not file a notice of appeal until a separate judgment has been filed and entered." The Court quoted the Advisory Committee notes from the 1963 amendments to Rule 58, stating that the amended rule "'requir[es] that there be a judgment set out on a separate document distinct from any opinion or memorandum which provides the basis for the entry of judgment.'" Id. at 385. The Court held that:

> The separate-document requirement was thus intended to avoid the inequities that were inherent when a party appealed from a document or docket entry that appeared to be a final judgment of the district court only to have the appellate court announce later that an earlier document or entry had been the judgment and dismiss the appeal as untimely. The 1963 amendment to Rule 58 made clear that a party need not file a notice of appeal until a separate judgment has been filed and entered. See United States v. Indrelunas, 411 U.S. 216, 220-222 (1973).

Mallis, 435 U.S. at 384-385 (emphasis added). The Court went on to state that:

> In United States v. Indrelunas, we recognized that the separate-document rule must be "mechanically applied" in determining whether an appeal is timely. Id., at 221-222. Technical application of the separate-judgment requirement is necessary in that context to avoid the uncertainties that once plagued the determination of when an appeal must be brought. –

Mallis, supra at 386 (emphasis added).

Thus, this Court clearly and unambiguously held that a party need not file a notice of appeal until a separate judgment has been entered under Rule 58. Prior to the panel's ruling in this case, lower courts, including the Eleventh Circuit, have consistently upheld this mandate. See FOGADE v. ENB Revocable Trust, 263 F.3d 1274, 1286 (11th Cir. 2001) ("'A party safely may defer the appeal until Judgment Day if that is how long it takes to enter the [Rule 58] document.'" (citation omitted)); In re Kilgus, 811 F.2d 1112, 1117 (7th Cir. 1987) (same); Cooper v. Town of E. Hampton, 83 F.3d 31, 34 (2d Cir. 1996) (same); Virgo v. Riviera Beach Assocs., 30 F.3d 1350, 1356 (11th Cir. 1994) ("The separate document requirement of Rule 58 is intended to provide a bright-line for litigants and courts to identify when the period for appeals begins. . . . The rule 'must be mechanically applied in order to avoid new uncertainties as to the date on which judgment is entered.'").

Although the Supreme Court in Mallis held that a party may always await the entry of a separate judgment before filing a notice of appeal, it recognized that the parties could waive the requirement of a separate judgment:

> In United States v. Indrelunas, we recognized that the separate-document rule must be "mechanically applied" in determining whether an appeal is timely. Id., at 221-222. Technical application of the separate-judgment requirement is necessary in that context to avoid the uncertainties that once plagued the determination of when an appeal must be brought. . . . The need for certainty as to the timeliness of an appeal, however, should not prevent the parties from waiving the separate-judgment requirement where one has accidentally not been entered. As Professor Moore notes, if the only obstacle to appellate review is the failure of the District Court to set forth its judgment on a separate document, "there would appear to be no point in obliging the appellant to undergo the formality of obtaining a formal judgment." 9 J. Moore, Federal Practice P110.08 [2], p. 120 n. 7 (1970). "[I]t must be remembered that the rule is designed to simplify and make certain the matter of appealability. It is not designed as a trap for the inexperienced . . . The rule should be interpreted to prevent loss of the right of appeal, not to facilitate loss." id., at 119-120.

Mallis, supra at 386 (emphasis added). Thus, although the Supreme Court held that no purpose would be served by dismissing an appeal of a final decision simply because the district court had not yet entered a separate judgment, it expressly held that parties "need not file a notice of appeal until a separate judgment has been filed and entered." In the present case, the notice of appeal was filed within the requisite period after the district court entered its Rule 58 judgment. Dismissal of the appeal is thus directly contrary to the Supreme Court's clear holding in Mallis and Indrelunas.

2. The panel decision establishes a new Eleventh Circuit rule.

Instead of considering Supreme Court authority directly on point, the Eleventh Circuit panel relied on dicta in prior Eleventh Circuit cases in reaching its decision. For apparently the first time, however, it applied such dicta to dismiss an appeal that was timely filed based on Supreme Court authority, rather than to uphold an appeal against an assertion that it was premature. Thus, the panel's ruling, and its denial of Relator's petition for en banc rehearing, constitutes the establishment of a new rule for the Eleventh Circuit, one that directly contradicts Supreme Court authority.

In Schuurman v. Motor Vessel "Betty K V", 798 F.2d 442 (11th Cir. 1986), an Eleventh Circuit decision cited by the panel, the court did not address the applicability of the separate document rule. Indeed, Rule 58 is not even mentioned in Schuurman, much less analyzed. Nor does Schuurman discuss or even mention the Supreme Court's decisions in Mallis and Indrelunas. Rather, Schuurman dealt with when an order should be considered final, which is a completely different issue from Rule 58's requirement that a judgment be set forth on a separate document. See Theriot v. ASW Well Service, Inc., 951 F.2d 84, 87 (5th Cir. 1992) ("Finality of a judgment, appealability of a judgment, and the separate document requirement are different concepts"). An order may well constitute a "final" decision, and yet not comply with Rule 58's requirement that judgment be entered as a separate document.[3] Indeed, if a district court issues an order dismissing a complaint with prejudice, and providing no right of amendment, that is clearly a final decision, but it is emphatically not a separate judgment, and the appellant may await the entry of a separate judgment before filing his notice of appeal. See Kent v. Baker, 815 F.2d 1395, 1397 (11th Cir. 1987) (noting that dismissal order was not Rule 58 judgment, and that "The Supreme Court held that appellate courts must 'mechanically appl[y]' Rule 58 to protect a party from losing the right to appeal."); FOGADE v. ENB Revocable Trust, 263 F.3d 1274, 1286 (11th Cir. 2001) ("'A party safely may defer the appeal until Judgment Day if that is how long it takes to enter the [Rule 58] document.'" (citation omitted)).

[3] The Supreme Court recognized this in Mallis, noting that a decision could be "final" for appeal purposes before the entry of a

Moreover, the actual holding in Schuurman was to affirm the appellant's right to appeal under the facts of that case. The defendants argued that, because no final order of dismissal had been entered, the appeal was premature. Thus, the question in Schuurman was not whether the notice of appeal was too late, but whether it was too early. In rejecting the defendant's argument, the Court held that the order giving the plaintiff twenty days to file an amended complaint became final when the time for amendment expired, thus authorizing an appeal. The holding in that case – affirming the plaintiff's right to appeal – is thus perfectly consistent with the Supreme Court's holding in Mallis that a plaintiff may appeal an otherwise final decision without awaiting the formal entry of a separate judgment (although the plaintiff may always separate Rule 58 judgment. Mallis, supra at 386 n. 7. Although the final decision would give the appellate court jurisdiction over an appeal, the appellant need not file his notice of appeal until the entry of the Rule 58 judgment.

await the entry of such separate judgment), and is consistent with this Court's statement that Rule 58 "should be interpreted to prevent loss of the right of appeal, not to facilitate loss." Mallis, supra at 386. The panel's quite different application of that holding in this case, however, is directly contrary to the Supreme Court's holding in Mallis that "a party need not file a notice of appeal until a separate judgment has been filed and entered."

Because Schuurman did not purport to deal with the effect of Rule 58, or with the Supreme Court's clear holding that a party need not file a notice of appeal until the entry of a Rule 58 judgment, it did not constitute binding precedent on that issue. See KVOS, Inc. v. Associated Press, 299 U.S. 269, 279 (1936) ("'The most that can be said is that the point was in the case if anyone had seen fit to raise it. Questions which merely lurk in the record, neither brought to the attention of the court nor ruled upon, are not to be considered as having been so decided as to constitute precedents.'"); Bryant v. Avado Brands, Inc., 187 F.3d 1271, 1280 (11th Cir. 1999) (refusing to consider prior decision as controlling, because issue "was apparently not argued to the [prior] panel"); see also Crawford-El v. Britton, 523 U.S. 574, 118 S. Ct. 1584, 1590, 140 L. Ed. 2d 759 (1998) ('there is, of course, an important difference between the holding in a case and the reasoning that supports that holding.'). See also CBS v. Primetime 24 J.V., 245 F.3d 1217, 1227 (11th Cir. 2001) ("Even if that statement had been a holding of DBB, it would not bind us, because there is binding precedent of both this Court and the Supreme Court to the contrary.").

Similarly, FOGADE v. ENB Revocable Trust, 263 F.3d 1274, 1286 (11th Cir. 2001), the other case cited by the panel, did not constitute binding precedent requiring dismissal of the appeal. In FOGADE, the Eleventh Circuit upheld the timeliness of a notice of appeal, noting that a Rule 58 judgment had not been entered following the order of dismissal. The Court relied upon the principle that "we mechanically apply Rule 58 to protect the right of appeal," and that "'[a] party safely may defer the appeal until Judgment Day if that is how long it takes to enter the [Rule 58] document.'" Id. at 1285. In dicta in a footnote, the Court appeared to suggest that Schuurman adopted an "exception" to the Rule 58 requirement in certain circumstances not applicable to that case. Id. at 1286 n. 9. This statement was clearly dicta, as it was not addressed to the facts of that case. And as discussed above, this dicta was a mischaracterization of Schuurman, which did not in fact address Rule 58 at all. Thus, FOGADE's characterization of Schuurman as creating an "exception" to Rule 58 was double-dicta with no binding force whatsoever. See Dantzler v. United States IRS, 183 F.3d 1247, 1252 (11th Cir. 1999) ("Ford's unnecessarily broad interpretation of Thomas's holding is not binding in this case, and it cannot change the dicta in Thomas to something more. See United States v. Hunter, 172 F.3d 1307, 1310 n. 1 (11th Cir. 1999) (Carnes, J., concurring) ('Two layers of dicta cannot do what one does not – bind a later panel.')"). Moreover, the idea that Rule 58 can be disregarded under certain circumstances is contrary to Indrelunas's holding that there should not be "a case-by-case tailoring of the 'separate document' provision of Rule 58." Indrelunas, supra at 221.

Shorn of its dicta, the actual holding in FOGADE was a strong reaffirmation of the separate document rule, and the case expressly held that "'[a] party safely may defer the appeal until Judgment Day if that is how long it takes to enter the [Rule 58] document.'" FOGADE, supra at 1285. See also Virgo v. Riviera Beach Assocs., 30 F.3d 1350, 1356 (11th Cir. 1994) ("The separate document requirement of Rule 58 is intended to provide a bright-line for litigants and courts to identify when the period for appeals begins.... The rule 'must be mechanically applied in order to avoid new uncertainties as to the date on which judgment is entered.'"). Although the holding in FOGADE is consistent with Supreme Court authority, the dicta in footnote 9 is directly contrary to such authority.

The present case thus appears to be the first time that the Eleventh Circuit has dismissed an appeal based on the dicta set forth in Schuurman or FOGADE – neither of which cases even attempted to explain how such a result could be consistent with this Court's decisions in Mallis and Indrelunas. Thus, through a combination of improper reliance upon dicta in dissimilar cases and an apparent willful refusal to even acknowledge binding Supreme Court authority repeatedly cited by Relator, the Eleventh Circuit panel in this case has for the first time explicitly adopted a rule that directly contradicts this Court's prior decisions.

3. The panel failed to even address the conflict with Supreme Court authority.

Not only did the panel refuse to follow Mallis and Indrelunas, but it failed even to mention them in its decisions, although Relator extensively discussed them in his response to JCH's Motion to Dismiss and in his petition for en banc rehearing. The panel made no attempt whatsoever to distinguish Indrelunas or Mallis, to reconcile its decision with those cases, or even to acknowledge the existence of the Supreme Court authority. Rather, the panel's initial one-paragraph order merely cited, without explanation, Schuurman and FOGADE – cases which themselves failed to discuss the contrary Supreme Court authority or to explain how the rule adopted in this case could be reconciled with such authority. [App. at 22-23]. Similarly, the panel's one-sentence denial of Relator's petition for rehearing again failed to acknowledge the conflict. [App. at 24]. If the decision of the panel is allowed to stand, this Court's unambiguous rulings will thus have effectively been overturned in the Eleventh Circuit, without benefit of any attempt to reconcile the new rule with this Court's holdings. The grant of certiorari and the reversal of the panel's decision is thus necessary to ensure that lower courts may not get around binding authority by simply ignoring it.

4. The panel opinion creates an inter-circuit conflict.

Not surprisingly, given this Court's unambiguous rulings to the contrary, the panel's decision in this case creates a conflict with other circuits that uphold this Court's rulings. In reliance on Mallis and Indrelunas, other circuits have routinely upheld this Court's mechanical application of Rule 58. See In re Kilgus, 811 F.2d 1112, 1117 (7th Cir. 1987) ("A party safely may defer the appeal until Judgment Day if that is how long it takes to enter the document."); Cooper v. Town of E. Hampton, 83 F.3d 31, 34 (2d Cir. 1996) (same). Indeed, prior to the ruling in this case, the Eleventh Circuit itself had always mechanically applied Rule 58 to preserve the right to appeal. See Kent v. Baker, 815 F.2d 1395, 1397 (11th Cir. 1987) (noting that dismissal order was not Rule 58 judgment, and that "The Supreme Court held that appellate courts must 'mechanically appl[y]' Rule 58 to protect a party from losing the right to appeal."); FOGADE v. ENB Revocable Trust, 263 F.3d 1274, 1286 (11th Cir. 2001) ("'A party safely may defer the appeal until Judgment Day if that is how long it takes to enter the [Rule 58] document.'" (citation omitted)).

Indeed, the Seventh Circuit has reached the precisely opposite conclusion under nearly identical facts. In Otis v. City of Chicago, 29 F.3d 1159 (7th Cir. 1994), the Seventh Circuit considered a situation where the district court dismissed a suit but gave the plaintiff a specified period of time for reinstatement. The Seventh Circuit held that, upon the expiration of that time, the decision became final, thus authorizing an appeal even in the absence of a Rule 58 judgment. Id. at 1165-66. Unlike the panel in this case, however, the Seventh Circuit in Otis expressly considered this Court's rulings in Mallis and Indrelunas, and upheld the principle that a party may always await the entry of a separate judgment before filing a notice of appeal. As the Seventh Circuit stated:

> These cases collectively safeguard the opportunity to appeal. If the loser appeals at once, the case proceeds without a pointless remand; if she waits until the formal judgment, she is secure against forfeiture. Mallis emphasized this element of Indrelunas. . . . "A party safely may defer the appeal until Judgment Day if that is how long it takes to enter the document."

Otis, supra at 1167; see also id. ("The Supreme Court responded in Indrelunas with the holding that a party who waits for the separate judgment always is protected."). Thus, under the same essential facts as in the present case, the Seventh Circuit recognized that, while a party need not await the entry of a separate judgment, it is always protected if it does so. Such a ruling is fully in keeping with this Court's holdings in Mallis and Indrelunas. The Eleventh Circuit's ruling in the present case, by contrast, is directly contrary to the Supreme Court's authority, and thus creates a conflict with those circuits, including the Seventh, that uphold such authority.

CONCLUSION

For the above reasons, the Court should grant a writ of certiorari to review the lower court's decision, or should summarily vacate or reverse the decision pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 16(1).

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA
PANAMA CITY DIVISION

UNITED STATES OF
AMERICA ex rel.
JOHN A. KING, D.O.,

Plaintiff,

v.

CASE NO.:
5:99-CV-73-SPM

JACKSON COUNTY HOSPITAL CORPORATION,

Defendant. /

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS

I. INTRODUCTION

THIS MATTER has come before the Court upon the Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint (doc. 133), wherein the Plaintiff, John A. King, alleges that the Defendant Jackson County Hospital Corporation (JCH), has violated provisions of the False Claims Act (FGA). See 31 U.S.C. § 3729 et seq. The Defendants Motion to Dismiss (doc. 134), has responded to the Plaintiffs allegations by asserting several defenses, including that: 1) the Plaintiffs have failed to meet Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b)'s particularity requirement, 2) the Plaintiff's complaint has failed to state a cause of action upon which relief may be granted and should be dismissed in accordance with Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), and 3) JCH is not subject to the FCA, because, it is an arm of the state and consequently insulated from being sued in a federal district court. For the reasons set forth below the Court finds that the Defendant's Motion to Dismiss will be granted.

II. THE FALSE CLAIMS ACT

The FCA provides, in relevant part, that a defendant may be held liable if they have: 1) knowingly[1] presented or have caused to be presented to the federal government a false or fraudulent claim[2] for payment or approval, or 2) if they have knowingly caused to be made a false record or statement that allows a false or fraudulent claim to be paid by the federal government. 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729(a)(1)-(2). In order to establish a prima facie case under the FCA, a plaintiff is required to prove: "(1) the defendant presented or caused to be presented to an agent of the United States a claim for payment; (2) the claim was false or fraudulent; and (3) the defendant knew the claim was false or fraudulent." Hutchins v. Wilentz, Goldman & Spitzer, 253 F.3d 176, 182 (3d Cir. 2001).

"The Act was first passed by Congress in 1863, at the request of president Lincoln, in an effort to combat profiteering by the Union Army suppliers during the Civil War." United States ex rel. Williams v. NEC Corp., 931 F.2d 1493, 1496-97 (11th Cir. 1991). An FCA action may either be brought by the Government under the auspices of the Attorney General, against the party alleged to have engaged in the fraudulent activity, see § 3730(a); or, as is the case in this matter, a private individual known as a Relator[3] may bring a civil cause of action, on behalf of both the Government and for themselves. § 3730(b)(1). This latter example is known as a qui tam action, which is defined as a cause of "action brought under a statute that allows a private person to sue for penalty, part of which the government or some other institution will receive." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 1262 (7th ed. 1999). "The purpose of the qui tam provisions of the False Claims Act is to encourage private individuals who are aware of fraud being perpetrated against the Government to bring information forward "Williams, 931 F.2d at 1497 (citations and internal quotation omitted).

[1] The use of the terms "knowing" and "knowingly" are applicable in those instances where the individual charged: "(1) has actual knowledge of the information; (2) acts in a deliberate ignorance of the truth or falsity of the information; or (3) acts in reckless disregard of the truth or falsity of the information." 31 U.S.C. § 3729(b)

[2] 31 U.S.C. § 3729(c) defines a "claim," in relevant part, as "any request or demand, whether under a contact or otherwise, for money or property which is made to a contractor, grantee, or other recipient if the United States government any portion of the money or property which is requested or demanded, or if the Government will reimburse such contractor, grantee, or other recipient for any portion of the money or property which is requested or demanded."

In an FCA action brought by a Relator, a copy of the complaint must first be served on the Government. The complaint shall remain under seal for a period of sixty days, during which time the Government may make a determination as to whether it will intervene. § 3730(b)(2). If the Government decides that intervention is appropriate,[4] it has primary responsibility for pursuing the matter. § 3730(c)(1). Alternatively, if the Government decides that it will decline to intervene in an action, the Relator may continue to pursue the action on his own. § 3730(c)(3).

The FCA has also established that in instances where the Government has decided to pursue an action, brought to its attention by a Relator, the Relator will receive, depending on the extent of the individual's contribution, between 15 and 25 percent of the proceeds of the action or settlement of the claim," as well as reasonably incurred expenses. § 3730(d)(1). If, in turn, a determination is made by the Government not to proceed with a particular claim, and the Relator pursues the matter on his own, he or she is entitled to receive an amount in damages that a court deems reasonable, ranging between 25 and 30 percent "of the proceeds of the action or settlement and shall be paid out of such proceeds," as well as other reasonable costs including attorney's fees. § 3730(d)(2).

III. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The Plaintiff-Relator has brought this qui tam action, on behalf of both himself and the United States, contending that the Defendant, JCH, has violated the FCA by knowingly submitting false claims for Medicare or Medicaid. Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint, ¶ 1. The Plaintiff, is an orthopaedic surgeon and anesthesiologist, who has worked for JCH since October of 1997. Id. at ¶ 6. While in his professional capacity, the Plaintiff alleges that he has become acquainted with the Defendant's business and billing practices, asserting that they contravene the FCA. Id. The Plaintiff alleges that JCH is involved in three separate schemes: 1) JCH routinely waived requiring payment of deductibles; 2) JCH improperly charged for equipment it was not licensed to supply; and 3) JCH allowed its employees to fill out fraudulent timecards.

A. Waiver of Copayments

The Office of the Inspector General of the Department of Health and Human Services has issued a Special Fraud Alert putting the health care industry on notice regarding potentially fraudulent billing procedures being engaged in by Medicare and Medicaid providers, specifically the practice of waiving the payment of Medicare deductibles. Id. at ¶¶ 14-16. The Plaintiff alleges that JCH routinely waived requiring Medicare and Medicaid patients to pay deductibles, wherein JCH would offer a 10% discount to all patients, including those receiving Medicare and Medicaid, who paid their entire bill within 30 days. Id. at ¶18. The Plaintiff avers that "the discount was only offered after bills had been submitted to any private or government insurer, and only on the portion of the bill for which the patient himself or herself was liable." Id.

The Plaintiff alleges that JCH's practice of waiving copayment of deductibles has led to Medicare and Medicaid being billed at a higher rate, by falsely stating JCH's actual charges. Id. at ¶20. The Plaintiff maintains that the discounts were not offered until after JCH had submitted bills to insurance companies, therefore the federal government was never made aware of JCH's "discount program," and according to the Plaintiff, "all Medicare and Medicaid claims submitted by JCH pursuant to the discount program constitute false claims." Id.

B. Improperly Charging for Equipment JCH was not Licensed to Supply

Secondarily, the Plaintiff alleges that the Defendant, though not a licensed supplier of Durable Medical Equipment (DME), would "bill Medicare or Medicaid for items of DME," Id. at ¶22. Moreover, physicians who were affiliated with the Defendant would, according to the Defendant, "routinely send individuals to JCH with a prescription for items of DME," Id., and as such, "[t]his practice resulted in the submission of numerous false Medicare and Medicaid claims" including, inter alia, "billing for a medically unnecessary emergency room visit." Id. at ¶ 26. Moreover, by including the costs of improperly prescribed DME in the JCH annual cost reports "improperly inflated [the Defendant's] costs, thus resulting in higher future reimbursement levels for Medicare and Medicaid." Id.

C. Permitting Employees to Submit False Time Cards

Finally, the Plaintiff charges that the Defendant "increased billings for anesthesia services by falsely reporting modifiers to anesthesia services provided Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries." Id. at ¶ 27. The Plaintiff, became aware that the employees of JCH would: 1) bill procedures as lasting one hour, when in actuality the particular procedure would often last no longer than 15 minutes, 2) falsely classify regional anesthesia encounters as general ones, 3) falsely charge for technical equipment that was not related to the anesthesia encounter, 4) falsely bill in one hour increments in contravention of Medicare billing provisions. Id.

The Plaintiff also asserts that he has been made aware of nurses, working within JCH, who have falsified time cards, whereby supervisors would sign off on time sheets indicating that individual nurses worked one hour, when truly the nurses had only spent "15 minutes or less of nurse time." Id. at ¶28. Additionally, according the Plaintiff, nurses "would routinely add on anesthesia time to the recovery room" in order to inflate anesthesia fees, and operating room nurses were permitted to falsely represent travel time in instances where there was "no travel time attributable to their operating-room procedures." Id. The Plaintiff-Relator maintains that JCH countenanced this conduct, which resulted in "inflate[d] payments for patient services," and ultimately led to the submission of false claims for payment to Medicare and Medicaid. Id. at ¶29.

IV. ANALYSIS

The Court begins its analysis by noting that since this matter comes before the undersigned on a motion to dismiss, the complaint "must be construed in a light most favorable to the [P]laintiff and the factual allegations must be taken as true." Brooks v. Blue Cross Blue Shield of Florida, 116 F.3d 1364, 1369 (11th Cir. 1997). With this understanding, the Court must first outline the Eleventh Circuit's "particularity requirement" for fraud actions, and how this pleading standard affects claims brought under the FCA. Next, the Court must analyze the Defendant's complaint to determine whether it complies with Eleventh Circuit's standard. Thereafter, the Court must then determine whether the allegations, as pled in the complaint, constitute an actionable claim under the FCA. Finally, the Court will determine whether JCH is an "arm" of the state, thus preventing the hospital from being sued in federal district court.

A. The FCA's Particularity Requirement

Federal Rule Of Civil Procedure 9(b) provides in relevant part that, "[i]n all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting the fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." (emphasis added). Generally speaking, the particularity requirement referenced in Rule 9(b) is designed to give a defendant notice as to the precise nature of the allegations of fraud being brought against them; and in addition, is intended to insulate defendants from claims that are wholly without merit, by insisting on precision. Brooks v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Fla, 116 F.3d 1364, 1370-71 (11th Cir. 1997); see also United States v. Baxter International, Inc., 345 F.3d 866, 883 (11th Cir. 2003) ("Where Rule 9 is implicated the plaintiffs must plead not only the general nature of their injuries but also the specifics of how and when they were injured."). Consequently, the Eleventh Circuit has observed that a party alleging fraud, may withstand a motion to dismiss a complaint on Rule 9(b) grounds if the complaint indicates:

> (1) precisely what statements were made in what documents or oral representations or what omissions were made, and (2) the time and place of each such statement and the person responsible for making (or, in the case of the omission, not making) same, and (3) the content of the statements and the manner in which they misled the plaintiff, and (4) what the defendants obtained as a consequence of the fraud.

Brooks, 116 F.3d at 1371. (citation and quotation omitted).

The Eleventh Circuit has also specifically confronted Rule 9(b)'s applicability to claims brought under the FCA, and has made it clear that a "plaintiff's complaint must allege the details of the defendant's allegedly fraudulent acts, when they occurred, and who engaged in them." United States ex rel. Cooper v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Florida, 19 F.3d 562, 568 (11th Cir. 1994) (emphasis added). Principally, one is liable under the FCA if they have knowingly presented a false claim for payment to the federal government. United States ex rel Clausen v. Laboratory Corp. of America. Inc., 290 F.3d 1301, 1311 (11th Cir. 2002). Thus, regardless of the degree of impropriety a defendant is engaged in, under the FCA there is no actionable claim unless the knowing submission of a fraudulent claim results from the defendant's actions. Id. Moreover, a plaintiff may not rely on generalized assertions of fraud, and therefore, consistent with Rule 9(b)'s understanding, the complaint must have "some indicia of reliability . . . to support the allegation of an actual false claim for payment being made to the Government" Id. (emphasis in the original).

The Plaintiff has directed the undersigned's attention to an unpublished opinion rendered by an Eleventh Circuit panel which articulates a seemingly more permissive pleading standard under Rule 9(b), when information concerning potentially fraudulent activity is within the exclusive possession of the entity being sued. See United States ex rel. Hill v. Morehouse Medical Associates, Inc., 2003 WL 22019936 (11th Cir. (Ga.) August 15, 2003)). The Court notes that this proposition has never been doubted in the context of a fraud action. See, e.g., ABC Arbitrage v. Tchuruk, 291 F.3d 336, 350 (5th Cir. 2002); Divittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Industries, Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1247 (2d Cir. 1987). However, "[t]his relaxed standard does not obviate the duty of the plaintiff to fully plead fraud allegations." United States ex rel. Butler v. Magellan Health Services, 101 F.Supp.2d 1365, 1369 (M.D.Fla. 2000) (citing

Anthony Distributors, Inc. v. Miller Brewing Co., 904 F.Supp 1363, 1366 (M.D.Fla. 1995)).[5]

The Plaintiff's complaint outlines a series of apparently fraudulent schemes engaged in by JCH and its employees. The Court will simultaneously address, albeit briefly, two of the schemes alleged to have occurred: 1) the submission of fraudulent DME bills to Medicaid and Medicare, and 2) the submission of fraudulent time-cards by nurses employed by the Defendant. The Defendant has attached a memorandum sent out by Ruth Pascu, Patient Account Director for JCH, dated October 30, 1998. See Plaintiff's Complaint, Exhibit B. The memorandum notes that "Jackson Hospital is not a licensed DME vendor and therefore cannot bill for DME items. Your patient must be treated as an emergency room patient in order for us to fill your prescription." The implication from this memorandum is that JCH personnel were improperly billing for DME items. This claim, as presented, is inadequate because while it may indeed suggest that fraudulent activity was countenanced by JCH, the "Plaintiff pleads no specific occurrences of a false claim." Butler, 101 F.Supp.2d at 1369 (emphasis added).

[5] The Court would also note that the degree of particularity provided by the relator in Hill, specifically as it related to time, content, and who engaged in the fraudulent conduct, far exceeded the particularity found in relator's complaint in Clausen, which that court found failed to meet Rule 9(b)'s minimal pleading requirements. 290 F.3d at 1315.

Moreover, the Plaintiff's allegation that JCH was permitting its employees to submit fraudulent time-cards also provides scant detail beyond describing the general nature of the scheme. Accordingly, without more in the way of detail, neither of these two schemes discussed in the Plaintiff's complaint satisfies Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirement, because the claims fail to identify with any specificity, when the fraudulent acts occurred, who engaged in such conduct, and if any false claims were submitted for payment. See e.g., United States ex rel. Cooper v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Florida, 19 F.3d at 568; Coffey v. Foamex L.P., 2 F.3d 157, 161-62 (6th Cir. 1993) (observing that a minimum, Rule 9(b) requires a plaintiff to "allege the time, place, and content of the alleged misrepresentation").

A slightly more difficult question involves whether the Defendant's policy of allowing patients, including those receiving Medicare, to waive a percentage of their deductible if fully paid within thirty days of receiving their bill presents an actionable claim under the FCA. The Court finds that as it pertains to this allegation, the Plaintiff has provided sufficient detail to overcome Rule 9(b). Nevertheless, satisfying this pleading burden is of little consequence if the Plaintiff presents no violation of law.

The Plaintiff has affixed a copy of a bill, sent to a patient who had been treated by JCH outlining the Defendant's policy, dated November 29, 1998. See Plaintiff's Complaint, Exhibit A. ("A 10% PROMPT PAY DISCOUNT is offered on patient liability (self pay, deductibles and co-payments) if paid in full within 30 days of the date of this statement."). The bill shows that Medicare paid approximately 98 percent, or $36,004.35, of the patient's $36,768.35 medical bill, and the remainder, $764, was to be paid by the patient. According to the billing statement, the Defendant offered the patient a 10 percent discount if the bill was fully paid within 30 days. The Plaintiff argues that this policy constitutes an impermissible inducement to do business with JCH.

The Department of Health and Human Services, the agency which oversees Medicare, has previously attempted to address potential impropriety related to Medicare provider copayment plans, with incentives similar to those offered by the Defendant such as providing services at reduced prices. In an effort to stem continuing problems associated with Medicare, the Department of Heath and Human Services' Office of the Inspector General (OIG) has issued a series of Special Fraud Alerts. See Department of Health and Human Services Publication of OIG Special Fraud Alerts, 59 Fed.Reg. 65,372 (December 19, 1994). A Special Fraud Alert issued in May of 1991, indicated that the OIG was actively investigating "charged-based" health care providers, practitioners and suppliers of health care items who routinely waived Medicare copayments and deductibles, which the OIG maintained, was potentially actionable under the Medicare Anti-Kickback Statute. See, e.g., 42 U.S.C. § 1320a-7b(b)(1)(B) ("whoever knowingly and willfully solicits or receives any remuneration . . . in return for purchasing . . . any good, facility, service or item for which payment may be made in whole or in part to [Medicare] shall be guilty of a felony"). The OIG noted that routinely waiving "deductibles and copayments by charge based providers practitioners or suppliers is unlawful because it results in (1) false claims, (2) violations of the anti-kickback statute, and (3) excessive utilization of items and services paid for by Medicare." 59 Fed.Reg. 65,372 at 5. The OIG described a potential factual scenario outlining the importance of combating routine waivers of deductibles and copayments, stating,

> A provider, practitioner or supplier who routinely waives Medicare copayments or deductibles is misstating its actual charge. For example, if a supplier claims that its charge for a piece of equipment is $100, but routinely waives a copayment, the actual charge is $80. Medicare should be paying 80 percent of $80 (or $64), rather than 80 percent of $100 (or $80). As a result the supplier's misrepresentation, the Medicare program is paying $16 more than it should for an item.

Id. at 6. The fraud alert provided a non-exhaustive list of examples which might indicate improper waiver of deductibles and copayments, including, inter alia, "[a]dvertisements which promise that 'discounts' will be given to Medicare beneficiaries." Id. at 7.

The Plaintiff contends that the claims raised in his complaint comport with the concerns expressed in the OIG's Special Fraud Alert, and thus, dismissal of this action is not appropriate. However, an entity's business practices that are seemingly inconsistent with an administrative regulation do not necessarily constitute fraud pursuant to the FCA. See United States ex rel. Hopper v. Anton, 91 F.3d 1261, 1266 (9th Cir. 1996) ("Violations of laws, rules, or regulations alone do not create a cause of action under the FCA."). The Seventh Circuit has observed, "the FCA is not an appropriate vehicle for policing technical compliance with administrative regulations. The FCA is a fraud prevention statute; violations of [an administrative agency's] regulations are not fraud unless the violator knowingly lies to the government about them." United States ex rel. Lamers v. City of Green Bay, 168 F.3d 1013, 1020 (7th Cir. 1999) (emphasis added); see also X Corp. v. Doe. 816 F.Supp. 1086, 1093 (E.D.Va. 1993) ("The heart of fraud is an intentional misrepresentation. A violation of a regulatory provisions, in absence of a knowingly false or misleading representation, does not amount to fraud."), aff'd, 17 F.3d 1435 (4th Cir. 1994) (table).

Because, "[t]he requisite intent [under the FCA] is the knowing presentation of what is known to be false," United States ex rel. Hagood v. Sonoma County Water Agency, 929 F.2d 1416, 1421 (9th. Cir. 1991), the Court finds that there has clearly been no indication that the Defendant knowingly presented a false claim for payment in the above-styled matter. See, e.g., Wang v. FMC Corp, 975 F.2d 1412, 1420 (9th Cir. 1992) ("[o]ne violates the [FCA] if one has 'actual knowledge' that one is submitting a false or fraudulent claim for payment or approval").[6] The Court further notes that it is likely that the Defendant's payment incentive program has only taken advantage of an open legal question, but, that is neither "deliberately ignorant nor recklessly disregardful" so as to be actionable under the FCA. Hagood, 929 F.2d at 1421; see also United States of America ex rel. Barrett, et al. v. Columbia/HCA Healthcare Corp. et al., 251 F.Supp.2d 28, 35 (D.D.C. 2003) ("Relators have not shown that waiver of co-pay is a violation that rises to the level affecting the government's decision to pay, such as by citing to an applicable statute or regulation."). This is simply because "[t]he [FCA] does not create liability merely for a health care providers disregard of Government regulations or internal policies, unless, as a result of such acts, the provider knowingly asks the Government to pay amounts it does not owe." United States ex rel. Willard v. Humana Health Plan of Texas, Inc., 336 F.3d 375, 381 (5th Cir. 2003).

Indeed, several federal appellate courts have also held "that a claim under the [FCA] is legally false only where a party certifies compliance with a statute or regulation as a condition to governmental payment." Mikes v. Straus, 274 F.3d 687, 697 (2d Cir. 2001) (citing United States ex rel. Siewick v. Jamieson Sci. & Eng'g, Inc., 214 F.3d 1372, 1376 (D.C.Cir. 2000)) (omitting citations to Fourth, Fifth, and Ninth Circuit cases holding similarly). In Mikes, the Second Circuit was confronted with a relator who asserted that a group of doctors falsely submitted claims for payment in violation of the FCA, by failing to "properly" calibrate certain diagnostic equipment, and failing to supervise the administration of the diagnostic tests, consequently rendering the test results uncertain, and leading to the submission of "false" claims to the Government. Id. at 693-96. The Mikes court analyzed the relators claims under, inter alia, two separate legal theories: 1) express false certification, and 2) implied false certification. An express false certification, "falsely certifies compliance with a particular statute, regulation or contract term, where compliance is a prerequisite to payment." Id. at 697-98 (emphasis added). Similarly, one is liable under the implied false certification theory "when the underlying statute or regulation upon which the plaintiff relies expressly states the provider must comply in order to be paid." Id. at 700 (emphasis in the original). The Second Circuit found that neither certification theory provided an actionable grounds for relief.

As was found in Mikes, the relator in the above-styled matter has not asserted that Medicare's reimbursement of JCH, in this instance, was premised on any such explicit, or implicit, certification policy. Additionally, the Eleventh Circuit has observed that failure to absolutely adhere to an agencies regulations will not summarily result in an actionable FCA claim, unless as a consequence the Government is compelled to pay for that which it is not responsible for. See Clausen, 290 F.3d at 1311. Therefore, this claim must fail.

C. Is JCH an "arm" of the state?

1. Background

The Supreme Court has held that a state agency may not be sued under the FCA, see Vermont Agency of Natural Resources v. United States ex rel. Stevens, 529 U.S. 765, 120 S.Ct. 1858 (2000), whereas local governments and municipalities may be held liable under the statute. Cook County, Illinois v. United States ex rel. Chandler, 538 U.S. 119, 123 S.Ct. 1239 (2003). The Eleventh Circuit has held that a determination as to whether an entity is immune from suit under the Eleventh Amendment, requires analyzing: "(1) how state law defines the entity; (2) what degree of control the state maintains over the entity; (3) where the entity derives its funds; and (4) who is responsible for judgments against the entity." Miccosukee Tribe of Indians of Florida v. Florida State Athletic Commission, 26 F.3d 1226, 1231 (11th Cir. 2000).

2. Discussion

a. How does state law define JCH?

The answer to this is provided in bill enacted by the Florida Legislature, Chapter 2003-363 (Act). The Act provides that it was the intent of the Legislature to create the Jackson County Hospital District, a public, non-profit independent special district, designed to attend to the medical needs of those in the surrounding area. See 2003-363(2) ("Purpose of District").

b. What degree of control does the state possess?

The affairs of JCH are controlled by a nine member board of trustees, all of whom are appointed by the Governor. See 2003-363(3)(1) ("Membership and organization of the governing board of the district"). The board's responsibilities include providing "for the operation and maintenance of all health care facilities, owned operated, or maintained by the District," 2003-363(4)(3), and the hiring and firing of personnel. Id.

c. Where does the entity derive its funds?

The Act provides that the Board of County Commissioners of Jackson County are responsible for "providing revenue for the erection, building, equipping, and maintenance and operation of" JCH, and thereafter, these revenues are to be turned over to JCH's trustees. 2003-363(5)(1) ("Authorization for Jackson County Board of County Commissioners to fund hospitals; source of funds").

d. Who is responsible for judgements against the entity?

The members of the board have the capacity to sue "to sue and be sued under the name of Jackson County Hospital District, without waiving any privilege or immunity of section 768.28." 2003-363(4)(2)(a) ("Powers of the District and its governing body").

3. Conclusion

Perhaps the singularly most important consideration in any Eleventh Amendment inquiry is who has primary financial responsibility if the entity in question is found liable by a court of law? The Eleventh Circuit has noted that "Eleventh Amendment protection is available only if satisfaction of the judgment sought against the state 'agency' must under all circumstances, be paid out of state funds." Travelers Indemnity Co. v. School Board of Dade County, Florida, 666 F.2d 505, 509 (11th Cir. 1982) (emphasis added). The Supreme Court has similarly found that the dispositive question in determining whether an political subdivision is immune under the Eleventh Amendment, is whether the state shall be exclusively responsible for the entity's expenditures, including debts incurred; because if not, the Eleventh Amendment will not be implicated. See Hess v. Port Authority Trans-Hudson Co., 513 U.S. 30, 48, 115 S.Ct. 394, 404 (1994). A review of the JCH's enabling statute, underscores that the Board of County Commissioners of Jackson County will have responsibility for providing the financing for JCH, not the State of Florida. Therefore the Court holds that JCH is simply not an extension of the State, and for the purpose of this action, JCH may be sued under the FCA. See Cook

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Petitioner, John A. King ("King" or "Petitioner") originally filed this qui tam action on March 17, 1999, against Respondent, Jackson County Hospital Corporation ("JCHC" or "Respondent") and Quorum Health Resources, L.L.C. ("Quorum") on behalf of himself and the United States Government pursuant to the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. § 3730. The U.S. Government declined to intervene in the action. However, in the proceedings below in the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals, the U.S. Government gave notice of its intention to oppose the appeal by King to the Eleventh Circuit.

On August 17, 2001, the United States District Court for the Northern District of Florida dismissed King's complaint in its entirety against JCHC with prejudice on the grounds that because JCHC was a government entity, it was not a "person" subject to liability under the FCA. The complaint was also dismissed as it related to Quorum for failure to allege fraud with particularity, but King was given leave to amend the complaint against Quorum. However, King did not file an amended complaint against Quorum, and Quorum was voluntarily dismissed by King with prejudice from the case.

King appealed the dismissal of the case against JCHC to the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals, but during the pendency of the appeal, this Court decided the case of Cook County, Illinois v. United States ex rel. Chandler, 538 U.S. 119 (2003), in which the Court overruled prior case law and held that the term "person" in the FCA was not intended to exclude local government entities. As a result, and with the agreement of JCHC, on April 3, 2003, the Eleventh Circuit vacated the dismissal of King's action against JCHC and remanded the case for further proceedings in light of the Chandler opinion.

On remand, King filed a one-count First Amended Complaint against JCHC alleging that JCHC violated the False Claims Act. The First Amended Complaint was again dismissed, the bulk of its allegations being dismissed for failure to plead fraud with particularity as required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b), the remainder being dismissed for failure to state a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). In its dismissal order dated June 1, 2004, the district court specifically informed King of the flaws in the First Amended Complaint (many of which existed in the original Complaint), and granted King "twenty days from the date of this order to file an amended complaint with the Clerk of Court[.]" The order also informed King that the twenty day period was "a final opportunity to amend his complaint[.]" (Pet. Appx. at 19.) The twenty day period expired on June 21, 2004.

Thereafter, notwithstanding express guidance and instruction from the court, King failed to file an amended complaint or any other paper by June 21, 2004, and did not file a notice of appeal by July 21, 2004, which was 30 days from when the dismissal order became effective and final. Notwithstanding the finality of the court's prior order, on August 26, 2004, the district court, sua sponte, entered a further order dismissing the "action" with prejudice. (Pet. Appx. at 20.) Again, no notice of appeal was filed within 30 days despite the fact that this August 26 order left no doubt that the entire action had been dismissed with prejudice. A judgment by the clerk was entered in favor of JCHC and against the United States and John King on August 31, 2004. (Pet. Appx. at 21.) King filed a Notice of Appeal on September 28, 2004 (Resp. Appx. at 1), 99 days after the dismissal order of the district court became final by the expiration of the time given for amendment.

On October 26, 2004, JCHC filed a motion to dismiss the appeal as untimely under Schuurman v. Motor Vessel "Betty K V", 798 F.2d 442 (11th Cir. 1986), a case involving a procedurally indistinguishable situation in which a complaint was dismissed and a specific period of time was given to file an amended complaint. As in this case, an amended complaint was not filed within the time provided by the court. The Eleventh Circuit held in Schuurman that in such situations, the order of dismissal becomes final for purposes of appeal upon the expiration of the time for amending the complaint, and the time for filing a notice of appeal begins to run upon such expiration. Id. at 445.

During the pendency of the appeal to the Eleventh Circuit, the U. S. Department of Justice filed a motion indicating its intention to file a brief for the United States of America as amicus curiae in support of affirmance, and asking for an extension of time within which to file the same. (Resp. Appx. at 2.) However, before the United States' amicus brief in support of affirmance could be filed, the Eleventh Circuit granted JCHC's motion to dismiss the appeal. By order dated January 10, 2005, the appeal was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction because of the failure to file a timely notice of appeal under Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 4(a)(1)(A), Schuurman, and Fogade v. ENB Revocable Trust, 263 F. 3d 1274, 1286 n.9 (11th Cir. 2001). (Pet. Appx. at 22-23.) On January 31, 2005, King filed a petition for rehearing en banc with the Eleventh Circuit, but said petition was denied. (Pet. Appx. at 24.) The Petition for Writ of Certiorari now at issue followed.

REASONS FOR DENYING THE PETITION

Petitioner argues that the Court should grant the petition in this case because the decision of the Eleventh Circuit is "directly contrary" to this Court's rulings in Bankers Trust Co. v. Mallis, 435 U.S. 381 (1978), and United States v. Indrelunas, 411 U.S. 216, 220 (1973). Petitioner claims that the Eleventh Circuit panel "ignored" such authority by failing to address it in its order dismissing Petitioner's appeal. In so doing, according to Petitioner, the Eleventh Circuit adopted a rule "in direct contradiction to binding authority of this Court[,]" and therefore, Petitioner argues, this Court should grant certiorari to "ensure compliance" with its rulings. (Petition for Certiorari, at p. 5-6.)

Rule 10 of this Court provides that review by way of a writ of certiorari is discretionary, and that petitions for such writs are granted "only for compelling reasons." Petitioner claims that his petition should be granted because this case involves a direct conflict with decisions of this Court and United States courts of appeals. In addition to the fact that the Eleventh Circuit's decision is not "directly contrary" to decisions of this Court or U.S. courts of appeals, there are no compelling reasons for granting the petition for certiorari.

First, this case is of limited significance beyond the parties thereto. The Eleventh Circuit's decision does not create a rule of substantive law applicable to the general public in the Eleventh Circuit that is at odds with the same substantive law of other circuits. Rather, the Eleventh Circuit decided this case on the unique facts and procedural posture presented – a situation that was not present in the opinions cited by Petitioner as being "directly contrary" with the Eleventh Circuit in this case. The unique nature of this case and its limited significance other than to the parties themselves weigh against granting the petition. See Layne Bowler Corp. v. Western Well Works, Inc., 261 U.S. 387, 393 (1923):

> it is very important that we be consistent in not granting the writ of certiorari except in cases involving principles the settlement of which is of importance to the public as distinguished from that of the parties, and in cases where there is a real and embarrassing conflict of opinion and authority between the circuit courts of appeal.

See also Singleton et ux. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 439 U.S. 940, 945 (1978) (Blackmun, J., dissenting) ("in allocating judicial resources, I consider it entirely appropriate to disfavor complicated cases which turn largely on unique facts.").

Second, the question presented by the petition is not of an import justifying this Court's review by writ of certiorari. Petitioner does not allege that any constitutional right is implicated in this case, or that the Eleventh Circuit's decision otherwise involves far-reaching consequences of a kind requiring the expenditure of this Court's judicial resources. Even to the extent that the question presented by the petition is somehow important beyond the parties to this case, this does not mean that the petition should be granted. See Excel Communications, Inc. v. AT&T Corp., 528 U.S. 946 (1999) (denying petition for writ of certiorari despite importance of question presented in petition). In fact, it has been noted that when important issues are presented in cases with unique or complex facts, the resolution of such issues may benefit from further consideration by lower courts before being addressed by this Court. See, e.g., Lackey v. Texas, 514 U.S. 1045 (1995) (opinion of Stevens, J., respecting denial of certiorari). In this regard, the denial of the petition would not, of course, constitute a ruling on the merits or an endorsement of the decision of the Eleventh Circuit.

See, e.g., Maryland v. Baltimore Radio Show, Inc., 338 U.S. 912, 919 (1950) (opinion of Frankfurter, J., respecting denial of certiorari).

Finally, although the decision of the Eleventh Circuit is not "directly contrary" to opinions of this Court, to the extent there is any such conflict, this again does not mandate a grant of certiorari. See Brown Transport Corp. v. Atcon, Inc., 439 U.S. 1014, 1020 (1978) (White, J., dissenting) (discussing numerous cases in which certiorari was denied despite the appearance of conflict with Supreme Court decisions). In fact, this Court has denied certiorari in a case involving similar issues regarding the timeliness of an appeal. See Amoco Oil Co. v. Jim Heilig Oil & Gas, Inc., 479 U.S. 966 (1986). Similarly, conflict between the Eleventh Circuit decision and decisions of other United States courts of appeals does not mandate a grant of certiorari. See id. at 1017 (White, J., dissenting) (discussing numerous cases in which certiorari was denied despite conflict with other federal or state court decisions). Indeed, certiorari has been denied despite the existence of a "real" or "square" conflict between circuits (as opposed to merely the appearance of a conflict). See Beaulieu v. United States, 497 U.S. 1038, 1039 (1990) (White, J., dissenting). Moreover, to the extent that there is an actual conflict in this case, the issue is one of procedure, not substantive law such that people in the Eleventh Circuit would be "subject to liabilities or entitlements that citizens in other circuits are not burdened with or entitled to." Id.

In sum, even if the decision of the Eleventh Circuit may be argued to create a conflict with the decisions of other courts, the issue presented is neither substantial enough in its importance nor wide-ranging enough in its effect to warrant review by certiorari. Ultimately, however, contrary to Petitioner's arguments, the decision of the Eleventh Circuit is not in "direct contradiction to binding authority of this Court," as discussed in more detail below.

1. The decision of the Eleventh Circuit is not directly contrary to binding precedent of this Court.

Petitioner's primary argument in support of his Petition for Writ of Certiorari is that the decision of the Eleventh Circuit is contrary to, and therefore precluded by, authority of this Court regarding the "separate document" rule of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 58. Specifically, Petitioner contends that the Eleventh Circuit's decision is precluded by this Court's opinions in United States v. Indrelunas, 411 U.S. 216 (1973), and Bankers Trust Co. v. Mallis, 435 U.S. 381 (1978). However, neither Indrelunas nor Mallis involved the facts at hand in this case or addressed the specific issue presented in this case, making Petitioner's arguments unavailing.

In dismissing Petitioner's appeal as untimely, the Eleventh Circuit explained that "the appeal period began upon the expiration of the time given by the district court for Appellant to amend his complaint[.]" (Pet. Appx. at 22.) The Eleventh Circuit cited its opinions in Fogade v. ENB Revocable Trust, 263 F.3d 1274, 1286 n. 9 (11th Cir. 2001), and Schuurman v. Motor Vessel "Betty K V", 798 F.2d 442, 445 (11th Cir. 1986), as authority supporting its decision. Schuurman, unlike Indrelunas and Mallis, addressed the specific question raised in this case – "When is a judgment that dismisses a complaint but allows a plaintiff a stated period within which he may amend the complaint final for purposes of appeal." Schuurman, 798 F.2d at 443.

In answering this question, the Eleventh Circuit first noted that normally a dismissal of a complaint is not a final order and does not terminate an action unless the court holds that no amendment of the complaint is possible or expressly states that in dismissing the complaint, the action is also being dismissed. Id. at 445 (discussing Czeremcha v. Int'l Assoc.

of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, 724 F.2d 1552 (11th Cir. 1984)).[1] The Eleventh Circuit then distinguished the circumstances at hand in Schuurman and explained:

> In dismissing the complaint, the district court may also provide for a stated period within which the plaintiff may amend the complaint. If the plaintiff does not amend the complaint within the time allowed, no amendment may be made absent leave of court, and the dismissal order becomes final at the end of the stated period. For appeal purposes, we hold that the order of dismissal in this situation becomes final upon the expiration of the time allowed for amendment. The time for appeal is measured from the date on which the district court order of dismissal becomes final.

Schuurman, 798 F.2d at 445 (emphasis added).

This discussion is directly on point with the issue in this case, and the Eleventh Circuit correctly made it the basis of its decision to dismiss Petitioner's appeal. Further, in a case subsequent to Schuurman, the Eleventh Circuit explained its opinion in Schuurman to mean that in addition to being "final" for purposes of appeal, dismissal orders under which the time for amendment has expired are also "entered" for purposes of triggering the time period for filing a notice of appeal under Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 4(a). See Hertz Corp. v. Alamo Rent-A-Car, Inc., 16 F.3d 1126,

1. In this regard, it is significant that even had the Eleventh Circuit not decided that Petitioner's appeal was untimely due to the fact that it was not filed within 30 days of the expiration of the time for amendment provided in the district court's June 1, 2004, order of dismissal, Petitioner likewise failed to file a notice of appeal within 30 days of the district court's subsequent order of August 26, 2004, that expressly dismissed the "action" with prejudice, thereby leaving no doubt as to finality.

1133 (11th Cir. 1994). The other case cited by the Eleventh Circuit in its decision to dismiss the Petioner's appeal, Fogade v. ENB Revocable Trust, 263 F.3d 1274 (11th Cir. 2001), noted the holding in Schuurman, but found it to be inapplicable to the facts in that case. However, in discussing Schuurman and quoting the language of its holding highlighted above, the Eleventh Circuit made clear in Fogade that: "Under our circuit law there is one circumstance in which a Rule 58 separate judgment is not required to start the running of the time for appeal." Fogade, 263 F.3d at 1286 n. 9. That circumstance – a dismissal order that allows a specified period of time within which to amend the complaint – was present in Schuurman and in this case, but was not present in either Indrelunas or Mallis. Thus, these cases are distinguishable and conflict does not exist.

Despite the fact that this pivotal circumstance was not present in Indrelunas or Mallis, Petitioner argues that the decision of the Eleventh Circuit to dismiss his appeal is precluded by Indrelunas and Mallis. Petitioner cites to the proposition of Indrelunas and Mallis that a party need not file a notice of appeal until the entry of judgment on a separate document under Rule 58 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Therefore, Petitioner argues, his failure to file any paper until after the clerk's sua sponte entry of a separate document under the heading "Judgment" is permitted notwithstanding any time limitations provided by the trial court in its order of dismissal and notwithstanding his failure to appeal the August 26, 2004, order which dismissed the "action" with prejudice. In addition to the factual distinctions in these cases, there are other reasons why Petitioner's argument misses the mark.

Rule 58, the basis of the Indrelunas and Mallis decisions, provides, in pertinent part: "Every judgment and amended judgment must be set forth on a separate document[.]"

However, the definition of "judgment" in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is not limited to separate documents actually entitled "judgments" such as that entered in this case and relied upon by Petitioner. Specifically, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(a) provides, in pertinent part, that: "'Judgment' as used in these rules includes a decree and any order from which an appeal lies." (emphasis added) Subsequent to Schuurman, the Eleventh Circuit applied this definition in Hertz, where it was again faced with a situation in which a complaint was dismissed, but leave was granted to amend the complaint within a certain period of time. See Hertz, 16 F.3d at 1132. After noting the breadth of the definition of "judgment" as "any order from which an appeal lies[,]" the court stated: "Since the time period for Hertz to amend ended on January 16, the dismissal became appealable under Schuurman, and it is properly characterized as a final judgment." Id.

Similarly, 28 U.S.C. § 1291 provides that the federal courts of appeals "shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions of the district courts of the United States[.]" (emphasis added). Here again, the use of the language "all final decisions" is not limited to separate final judgments, a fact that is actually implicit (if not explicit) in the language of Indrelunas and Mallis. See Indrelunas, 411 U.S. at 216-17; Mallis, 435 U.S. at 383-84. Indeed, it was noted in Mallis that "[a] 'judgment' for purposes of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure would appear to be equivalent to a 'final decision' as that terms is used in 28 U.S.C. § 1291." Mallis, 435 U.S. at 384 n.4.

Moreover, 28 U.S.C. § 2107(a) provides that with limited exceptions not applicable to this case, "no appeal shall bring any judgment, order or decree in an action, suit or proceeding of a civil nature before a court of appeals for review unless notice of appeal is filed, within thirty days after the entry of such judgment, order or decree." (emphasis added) This provision, setting forth a limitations period for filing an appeal, makes clear that the period begins to run from when the "judgment, order or decree" appealed from is entered. The Eleventh Circuit's opinion in Schuurman and its decision in this case are entirely consistent with this statute, as the notice of appeal filed by Petitioner was not filed "within thirty days after the entry of" the order being appealed – the June 1, 2004, order of dismissal, or within thirty days after the expiration of the twenty-day period provided in that order.

Much like 28 U.S.C. § 2107(a), Rule 4(a)(1)(A) of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure provides that except in certain limited exceptions not applicable here, in civil cases, "the notice of appeal required by Rule 3 must be filed with the district clerk within 30 days after the judgment or order appealed from is entered." (emphasis added) Of course, the "order being appealed from" in this case was the June 1, 2004, order of dismissal, as is evident from Petitioner's brief filed with the Eleventh Circuit and his Petition to this Court. As an "order from which an appeal lies," the district court's dismissal order of June 1, 2004, constitutes a "final decision" or "judgment" for purposes of appeal under the above statues and Federal Rules of Civil and Appellate Procedure.

The notion that in some circumstances appeals are to be taken from orders or decisions other than actual judgments is not novel, and has been applied in a number of situations. The Advisory Committee Notes to Rule 58 itself contemplate such circumstances. Specifically, the Advisory Committee Notes to the 2002 amendments to the rule provide that in situations in which the "collateral order doctrine" applies: "Appeal time should start to run when the collateral order is entered without regard to creation of a separate document and without awaiting expiration of the 150 days provided by Rule 58(b)(2)." (emphasis added) Hence, the notes to the very rule upon which Petitioner relies for the proposition that a party is always entitled to wait for a separate judgment before filing an appeal reveal that Petitioner's argument is flawed.

In sum, as explained above, the Eleventh Circuit's opinion in Schuurman and its decision in this case were expressly predicated upon facts not present in Indrelunas or Mallis, and are therefore not in direct conflict with Indrelunas and Mallis. To the contrary, the Eleventh Circuit's decisions can be harmonized with this Court's precedent, and have ample support in the Federal Rules of Civil and Appellate Procedure. In this regard, Petitioner relies almost exclusively upon Rule 58, but does not discuss the definition of "judgment," an essential term of the rule. Further, throughout his argument, Petitioner quotes language from Indrelunas and Mallis relating to Rule 58, but the removal of this language from the factual context from which it came hides the fact that the circumstances and procedural posture of those cases are distinguishable from this case. The pivotal circumstance upon which the decisions in Schuurman and in this case turned is the dismissal order's provision of a specific period of time within which to file an amended complaint. Here, as in Schuurman, Petitioner failed to file an amended complaint within the time expressly provided by the district court. Upon expiration of this time, the dismissals became "final decisions" or "judgments" for purposes of appeal under the Federal Rules of Civil and Appellate Procedure and specifically applicable Eleventh Circuit precedent. Petitioner has not shown that such precedent is in conflict with or otherwise precluded by opinions of this Court.

Even assuming, arguendo, that the Eleventh Circuit's decision may in some way seem inconsistent with certain language used in opinions of this Court, the decisions are not in direct conflict with actual holdings of those opinions as argued by Petitioner. Moreover, certiorari has previously been denied by this Court in a case involving the "separate document" requirement of Rule 58, and Petitioner has shown no compelling reason why this case should be different. See Amoco Oil Co. v. Jim Heilig Oil & Gas, Inc., 479 U.S. 966 (1986).

2. Nor does inter-circuit conflict justify granting the Petition for Writ of Certiorari.

Petitioner also argues that alleged conflict between the Eleventh Circuit's decision in this case and decisions of other circuits justifies the grant of his Petition. This argument is unavailing primarily because, here again, the cases cited by Petitioner are not on point with this case. However, even to the extent that an inter-circuit conflict has been created, this does not mandate the granting of the Petition, and indeed, no compelling reason for doing so has been advanced as is required by Rule 10 of this Court.

Save one, none of the cases cited by Petitioner in support of his inter-circuit conflict argument involved the key circumstance of a dismissal order setting forth a specific period of time within which to amend a complaint or meet some other condition. Rather, as with Indrelunas and Mallis, Petitioner merely excerpts certain language from other circuit cases in which the courts have noted Rule 58's "separate document" requirement. However, different passages in these cases and others make it abundantly clear that Rule 58 does not absolutely require a formal separate "judgment" in all circumstances. See, e.g., Otis v. City of Chicago, 29 F.3d 1159, 1165 (7th Cir. 1994); Morris v. City of Hobart, 39 F.3d 1105, 1110 (10th Cir. 1994) (holding that an Administrative Closing Order providing 60 days in which the parties could reopen proceedings "matures into a final judgment and, if no action is taken to resolve the case, satisfies the separate document requirement of Rule 58.")

The Third Circuit, in Shapiro v. UJB Financial Corp., 964 F.2d 272 (3d Cir. 1992), noted this Court's directive of employing a "practical rather than a technical construction" of the finality requirement of 28 U.S.C. § 1291, and reaffirmed its previous holding that "a plaintiff can convert a dismissal with leave to amend into a final order by electing to stand upon the original complaint." Id. at 278 (quoting Cohen v. Beneficial Indus. Loan. Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 546 (1949)). Here, Petitioner "elected not to file an amended complaint" (Pet. at 3), but instead of taking a timely appeal after making such election, or moving the court for entry of final judgment, Petitioner did nothing. Petitioner then had additional opportunities to file a notice of appeal, but consistently failed to do so. Under Petitioner's argument, had the clerk not sua sponte entered a separate judgment, the time limit for filing an appeal in this case would never have begun, and, taken to its logical conclusion, may never begin or end.

The only circuit case cited by Petitioner with facts at all analogous to this case is Otis v. City of Chicago, 29 F.3d 1159 (7th Cir. 1994). In Otis, the trial court entered an order dismissing the plaintiff's case but allowing for reinstatement of the case if certain conditions were met within a specified time period. See Id. at 1162. The plaintiff did not meet the conditions within the time period, but upon expiration of the period, the court took no further action. Id. However, unlike Petitioner, the plaintiff in Otis filed a timely notice of appeal thirty days after the expiration of the time period specified in the dismissal order. Id. Therefore, notwithstanding any similarity between the dismissal orders entered in Otis and this case, Otis is entirely distinguishable from this case insofar as the plaintiff in Otis filed a timely appeal.

Notwithstanding this glaring and critical difference between this case and Otis, Petitioner asserts that Otis involved "nearly identical facts." (Pet. at 16) Petitioner then cites to language in Otis discussing Indrelunas and Mallis' application of the "separate document" requirement of Rule 58, and argues that the decision of the Eleventh Circuit "is directly contrary to the Supreme Court's authority, and thus creates a conflict with those circuits, including the Seventh, that uphold such authority." (Pet. at 17) Hence, Petitioner is simply restating his argument that the Eleventh Circuit's decision is contrary to Indrelunas and Mallis, upon which he then premises the additional argument that the Eleventh Circuit's decision must therefore be contrary to any circuit court opinion upholding Indrelunas and Mallis. Not only is there a disconnect in this argument, but it is also premised upon an incorrect underlying assertion that the Eleventh Circuit's decision is contrary to Indrelunas and Mallis, the inaccuracy of which is discussed above.

Furthermore, there is other discussion in Otis that would support the result in Schuurman and in this case. Specifically, the defendant in Otis argued that under 28 U.S.C. § 2107(a)'s provision that "no appeal shall bring any judgment, order or decree in an action, suit or proceeding of a civil nature before a court of appeals for review unless notice of appeal is filed, within thirty days after the entry of such judgment, order or decree[,]" the plaintiff's notice of appeal should have been filed by August 14, 1991, thirty days after the dismissal order being appealed was entered in the docket on July 15, 1991. Otis, 29 F.3d at 1167. The Seventh Circuit disagreed based on its conclusion that "entry" of the order occurs "on the date the condition is satisfied or the time to satisfy it ends." Id. As noted above, the Eleventh Circuit agreed with this conclusion in Hertz, where it further refined its holding in Schuurman to mean that dismissal orders under which the time for amendment has expired are "entered" for purposes of triggering the time period for filing a notice of appeal. See Hertz, 16 F.3d at 1133. See also Fogade, 263 F.2d at 1286 n.9 (citing Otis alongside Schuurman and Hertz as examples of circumstances where a separate judgment is not required to start the running of the limitations period for filing an appeal).

Ultimately, the Seventh Circuit ruled that the plaintiff's notice of appeal in Otis was timely because it was filed within 30 days after the order appealed from was "entered" under the aforementioned construction of the term "entry." Otis, 29 F.3d at 1167-68. The court explained that 28 U.S.C. § 2107 "is designed to restrict parties to 30 days from the entry of an appealable order to take an appeal, not to ensure that the time for appeal ends before the opportunity to appeal begins. Otis appealed within the 30 days of the time the district court's order became appealable." Id. at 1168. This is not the case here, where Petitioner took no action during the 30-day appeal period following the expiration of the time provided by the court in its dismissal order, marking the "entry" thereof. Hence, Petitioner's reliance upon Otis as "reach[ing] the precisely opposite conclusion under nearly identical facts" (Pet. at 16) is simply incorrect.

Petitioner has not shown that an inter-circuit conflict has been created by the Eleventh Circuit's decision. However, to the extent that the Eleventh Circuit's decision does conflict with an opinion of another circuit, any such conflict is not so significant as to justify the grant of the Petition in this case. See Layne Bowler Corp., 261 U.S. at 393:

> it is very important that we be consistent in not granting the writ of certiorari except in cases involving principles the settlement of which is of importance to the public as distinguished from that of the parties, and in cases where there is a real and embarrassing conflict of opinion and authority between the circuit courts of appeal.

Being solely an issue of procedure, this case has little, if any, appreciable effect on the substantive law of the Eleventh Circuit as compared to other circuits. Stated differently, the effect of this case is not such that citizens of the Eleventh Circuit will be "subject to liabilities or entitlements that citizens in other circuits are not burdened with or entitled to." See Beaulieu v. United States, 497 U.S. at 1039 (White, J., dissenting).

3. The decision of the Eleventh Circuit is not otherwise improper.

Aside from reiterations of the argument that the Eleventh Circuit's decision conflicts with Indrelunas and Mallis, the remainder of the Petition argues that the Eleventh Circuit did not address Indrelunas and Mallis, and that the Eleventh Circuit relied upon dicta in deciding this case, thereby creating a new Eleventh Circuit rule. In addition to being flawed in certain respects, these arguments do not present compelling reasons for granting the Petition.

Initially, the argument that the Eleventh Circuit did not address Indrelunas and Mallis in deciding this case does not justify changing the outcome in light of the fact that Indrelunas and Mallis are not on point with this case, as explained above. Secondly, Petitioner's argument notwithstanding, it cannot be said with any certainty that the Eleventh Circuit "ignored" this Court's opinions in Indrelunas and Mallis simply because it did not discuss them. Indeed, the Eleventh Circuit decision does not contain discussion of any cases, even the ones cited therein. It simply cites Schuurman and Fogade as support for its decision without discussing them. Moreover, in responding to JCHC's motion to dismiss his appeal to the Eleventh Circuit, Petitioner made the exact same arguments he now makes regarding Indrelunas, Mallis, and Rule 58. Hence, it is specious at best to claim, as Petitioner does, that the Eleventh Circuit ignored these cases simply because they were not discussed by the court in its decision.

Moreover, although Indrelunas and Mallis were not applicable to the facts in Schuurman, and accordingly not discussed therein, Fogade (the other case cited by the Eleventh Circuit in its decision) does discuss cases and issues raised by Petitioner. Specifically, Rule 58 and cases applying its "separate document" requirement were cited in Fogade because of their applicability in that case. See Fogade, 263 F.3d at 1286. However, the court also noted the specific exception to the general rule: "Under our circuit law there is one circumstance in which a Rule 58 separate judgment is not required to start the running of the time for appeal." Fogade, 263 F.3d at 1286 n.9 (referring to Schuurman). In other words, the Eleventh Circuit has readily acknowledged and applied the principles set forth in Indrelunas and Mallis to cases in which they apply, and the fact that these cases were not discussed by the Eleventh Circuit in its decision in this case does not mean that they were "ignored" as Petitioner claims. Rather, as in Schuurman, they were not applicable to the circumstances at hand.

Petitioner also contends that the Eleventh Circuit relied upon dicta from its prior opinions in deciding to dismiss Petitioner's appeal, and that the holdings of the cases relied upon by the Eleventh Circuit actually support his position. These contentions are belied by the clear language of Schuurman:

> For appeal purposes, we hold that the order of dismissal in this situation becomes final upon the > expiration of the time allowed for amendment. The time for appeal is measured from the date on which the district court order of dismissal becomes final.

Schuurman, 798 F.2d at 445 (emphasis added).

This language is the crux of the Schuurman opinion, and in fact is expressly announced as a "holding" by the court. While the mention of Schuurman in Fogade is made in a footnote and is admittedly not part of a holding of that case, this is because, as explained above, Schuurman was not applicable to the facts of Fogade. Moreover, Fogade simply explained the holding of Schuurman, and did not purport set forth any holding or decisional law based upon Schuurman. Thus, Petitioner's argument that the Eleventh Circuit's decision to dismiss his appeal was premised upon dicta is erroneous.

Finally, notably absent from Petitioner's argument is any claim that he was deprived of the opportunity to appeal the district court's dismissal of his case. To the contrary, King was given multiple chances to follow the explicit instructions of the district court, and numerous opportunities to appeal the dismissal of his complaint. Specifically, King had the opportunity to amend his FCA claim against Quorum to plead with the requisite particularity, but failed to do so. The claim against Quorum, which arose out of the same facts as the claim against JCHC, was instead dismissed with prejudice. King then brought a similarly deficient FCA claim against JCHC that was also dismissed. Again King failed to file an amended complaint within the time given by the district court despite being expressly informed of the inadequacies of his pleading. Of course, King could also have chosen to stand by his allegations in the First Amended Complaint and taken an appeal of the district court's decision to dismiss the same without waiting for the 20-day period given by the court to expire. But he did not do so. Nor did he file a notice of appeal during the 30-day period following the expiration of the time for amendment set forth in the district court's order of dismissal. Although the dismissal order was final for purposes of appeal at this point, the district court thereafter entered an order dismissing the action with prejudice on August 26, 2004. Again, King failed to file a notice of appeal within 30 days of the entry of this order.

Under Petitioner's argument, had the clerk not eventually sua sponte entered a judgment, the time limit for filing an appeal in this case would never have begun, and in fact would never begin or end. Such a result is contrary to the express language as well as the purpose of Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 4(a) and 28 U.S.C. § 2107. This Court has noted in reference to Rule 4(a) and 28 U.S.C. § 2107 that:

> The purpose of the rule is clear: It is "to set a definite point of time when litigation shall be at an end, unless within that time the prescribed application has been made; and if it has not, to advise prospective appellees that they are freed of the appellant's demands. Any other construction of the statute would defeat its purpose."

Browder v. Director, Dept. of Corrections of Illinois, 434 U.S. 257, 264 (1978) (quoting Matton Steamboat Co. v. Murphy, 319 U.S. 412, 415 (1943)).

The result here, like Schuurman, prevents a situation such as that advanced by Petitioner, where the time for filing an appeal could run indefinitely, leaving a potential appellee to wonder if, and when, it is no longer subject to further litigation. Similarly, the result prevents a plaintiff from manipulating procedural rules, a concern expressed in Schuurman and elsewhere. See Schuurman, 798 F.2d at 445-46; Otis, 29 F.3d at 1165.

In petitioning this Court for certiorari relief, Petitioner is effectively asking this Court to ignore his repeated failure to properly plead under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and to likewise excuse his additional failure to file a timely notice of appeal despite having multiple opportunities to do so. As the only ultimate relief that would allow King's case to proceed is a holding that the First Amended Complaint was legally sufficient and can stand without amendment, Petitioner is in effect arguing that the First Amended Complaint is satisfactory despite its failure to plead with particularity and failure to state a cause of action. These pleading deficiencies cannot simply be ignored. Even the U.S. Government, against whom false claims were allegedly made, would argue for affirmance of the dismissal of this case. Compelling reasons for granting the Petition under Supreme Court Rule 10 do not exist in this case.

CONCLUSION

Petitioner's arguments in support of his Petition for Writ of Certiorari to the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals are unsound for the reasons set forth above. Ultimately, however, regardless of the merits of Petitioner's arguments, compelling reasons for the grant of certiorari relief do not exist in this case. Accordingly, certiorari should be denied.

APPENDIX B — MOTION OF THE UNITED STATES FOR EXTENSION OF TIME WITHIN WHICH TO FILE BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF AFFIRMANCE FILED DECEMBER 28, 2004

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT

No. 04-15178-B

USDC Case No. 5:99cv73 SPM

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, ex rel.
JOHN A. KING,

Plaintiff- Appellant,

v.

JACKSON COIJHTY HOSPITAL,

Defendant-Appellee.

MOTION OF THE UNITED STATES FOR EXTENSION OF TIME WITHIN WHICH TO FILE BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE

The United States moves for a forty-day extension of time, to and including February 9, 2005, within which to file a brief as amicus curiae in this case in support of affirmance. The grounds for this motion are as follows:

1. The brief for appellant in this case was filed on November 17, 2004. Appellee's responsive brief was filed on December 17, 2004. A brief by the United States as amicus curiae supporting the appellee would therefore be due on December 29, 2004.

Appendix B

2. This case is a qui tam action under the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. 3729 et seq., and is before the Court on the relator's appeal from a dismissal of his action. Among other things, the action charges Jackson County Hospital filed false claims with Medicare by (1) charging for medical equipment which it was not licensed to supply, (2) over-billing for anesthesia services, (3) allowing employees to submit inaccurate time cards, and (4) offering "prompt pay" discounts on beneficiaries' co-payment obligations – all in violation of the False Claims Act. The district court dismissed the action with prejudice, entering final judgment in favor of the defendant. Relator's appeal concerns only the third set of allegations noted above.

3. Resolution of the issues in this case could have a substantial impact on the scope of permissible claims and liability under the False Claims Act.

4. Given the importance of the issues raised by this case to the Government's implementation of, and ability to recover under, the False Claims Act, consultations between the affected agencies and the relevant components of the Department of Justice, including the Civil Division and the Office of the Solicitor General, must take place. Following those consultations, the Solicitor General must authorize any amicus participation by the United States. 28 C.F.R. 0.20(c). Moreover, the upcoming holidays and leave scheduled by persons within the affected agencies and Department of Justice are affecting the Government's ability to confer regarding issues raised by the district court's order and relator's appeal. In light of the foregoing, it will not be possible to complete the amicus decision process and (if our participation is authorized by the Solicitor General) to prepare an amicus brief by the current deadline.

5. Oral argument has not yet been scheduled in this case, and we will inform the Court and the parties immediately if the Solicitor General should decide not to authorize the Government's participation as amicus in this case.

6. Because this Court's resolution of the issues presented in this appeal could have a profound effect on the scope of the False Claims Act and the Government's interests under it, we believe that the views of the United States could be helpful to the Court in its determination of the issues raised here.

7. Counsel for defendant-appellee, Jackson County Hospital, John Beranek, has informed us that he has no opposition to this motion. Counsel for the relator, Michael Bothwell, has not informed us whether he will oppose this motion.
